GENERAL INFORMATION

PART II - RULES AND REGULATIONS

6. EXTENSION AND MAINTENANCE OF DISTRIBUTION PROVIDER FACILITIES (Cont'd)

F. TRANSFORMER VAULTS

Whenever a transformer vault is necessary to supply a Retail Customer with alternating current service in the network district, the Retail Customer will provide space satisfactory to the Distribution Provider in which space the Distribution Provider will construct, at its expense, a transformer vault for housing its transformers and necessary switching equipment. These transformers may, at the discretion of the Distribution Provider, be tied in with the Distribution Provider's secondary distribution system.

In the judgment of the Distribution Provider, where a transformer vault already available or in service on the Retail Customer's premises is adequate for service and the Retail Customer requires a change in the location of the vault, such a change will only be made at the expense of the Distribution Customer.

G. STANDBY: AUXILIARY OR BREAKDOWN SERVICE

A Distribution Customer whose Retail Customer is operating power generating equipment and has equipment that may be operated for auxiliary or breakdown service by privately generated power or by purchased power, may contract for service under Schedule A.

The Retail Customer shall not operate his own power generating equipment in parallel with the Distribution Provider's service except under control by, and with the Distribution Provider's consent. The Distribution Customer is responsible for obtaining this consent.

For Retail Customers operating standby power generating equipment as a distributed generator, refer to Rule 2.D.

H. TEMPORARY SERVICE

Temporary service is nonrecurring service intended to be used for a short time only, seasonal, or service to a building, structure or personal property which is a nonpermanent building, structure or personal property in that it may be readily removed or relocated. A Distribution Customer whose Retail Customer requires temporary service for other than a permanent residential dwelling unit shall, upon signing for such service, pay to the Distribution Provider a nonrefundable amount equal to the estimated cost to the Distribution Provider for labor, material and all other costs occasioned by the installation and removal of the service, less a reasonable credit for salvageable materials. If the Distribution Provider elects not to remove the temporary service facilities, the Distribution Provider shall refund any charges collected for the removal of the service.
